Bald eagle boom in NYS

By Gordon Woodworth
Chronicle News Editor

Bald eagles — America's symbol — have made a big comeback in the Empire State. "The bald eagle population in New York has just exploded," wildlife biologist Scott Crocoll tells The Chronicle.

"We had gotten down to one pair in 1970, on Hemlock Lake in western New York...and they weren't a healthy pair. They weren't producing young at that point." Now? "In 2017, as of two months ago, we are up to 460

Blasts writer who criticized Post-Star

To the Editor:

I read a letter from Chuck Sharrow to The Chronicle complaining about The Post-Star not printing his letter to the editor. Can't say as I blame them. You really don't have anything good to say.

You mentioned that people aren't buying the paper because you think Ken Tingley is biased against conservatives. Did you ever stop to think that they are printing articles about what is actually happening out there?

If we have a President that seems to go out of his way to BECOME the story of the day, don't blame the newspaper!

And that tired old cliché about liberals still hurting over the election is now ancient history. Try moving FORWARD. You are the one who seems to be stuck
