Our Hannah in Paris saw the terrorism very close-up

By Hannah Dineen
 Chronicle Freelance

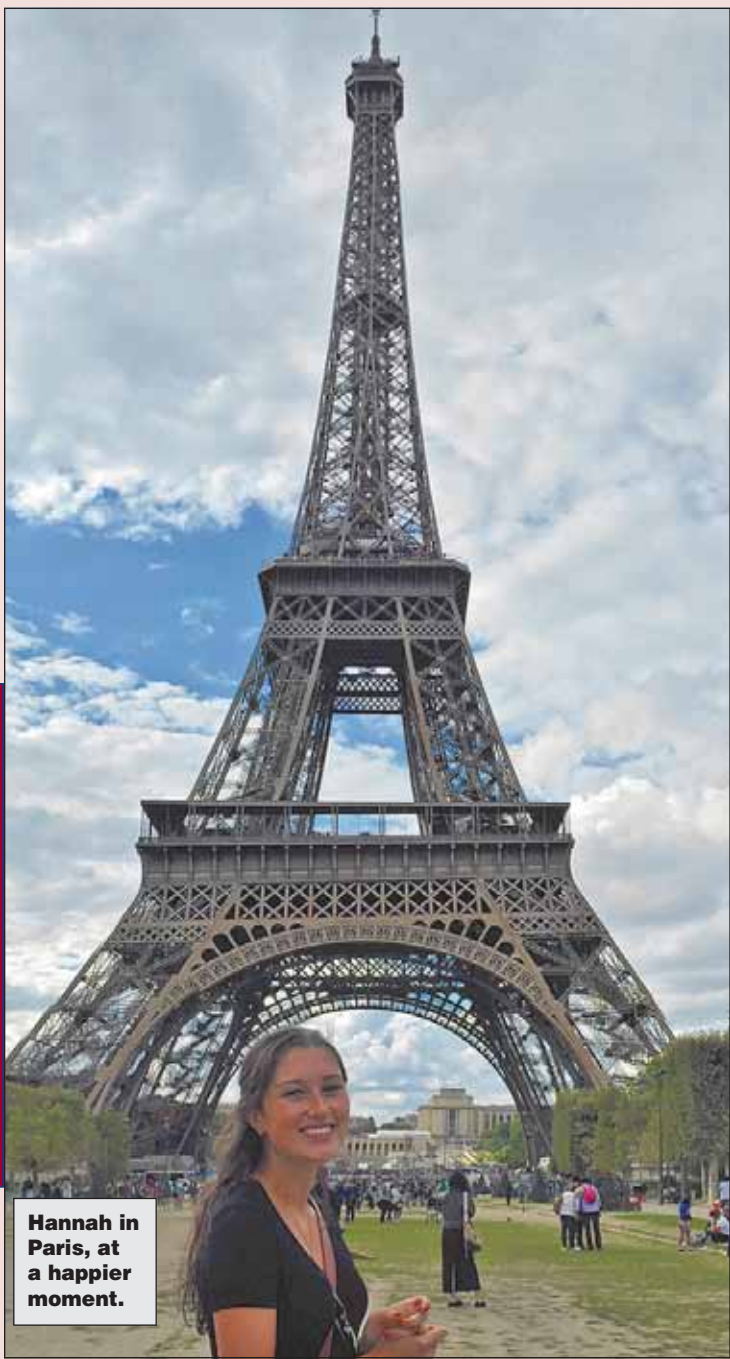

Editor's note: Hannah Dineen, a Colby College student and part-time Glen Lake resident who worked last summer as an intern at The Chronicle, is in Paris this semester. She adapted the following article from a posting she put on Facebook.

Friday night, November 13, I made a quiche at my friend Hayley's apartment. We sipped red wine and listened to jazz music. We ate overlooking the most breathtaking view of Paris, with a front row seat to the Eiffel tower.

We decided to call it an early night and I left for the metro at about 9:30 p.m. It was a little over a half-hour commute back to my apartment in the Voltaire area. It wasn't until I arrived

Safe but impacted; powerful report from our summer intern

Calls Frost's column 'unthoughtful'; all sides shut out views

Dear Mark,

I generally enjoy your opinion pieces as well considered and thoughtful conservative viewpoints; not so much with your recent paragraph imagining liberals stomping on the free speech of the nation. Your phrasing [in the "Inside Scoop" column headlined "Who's up for freedom? — Wanted: Liberals with a spine"] had the screeching tonality of the non-controversy regarding Starbucks coffee cups. Your comments were overblown, a little ranty, and fairly insulting.

Letters: Disagree & agree

With the inappropriate McCarthy reference, you were just shy of going full Godwin's Law. And you didn't even get her name right: Melissa Click. Not cool.

If you had stopped to think before putting pen to paper
