

Finally: Our man Dan sees a moose in Adks.

By Dan Ladd

Chronicle Outdoors Editor

It took a long time but after years of trekking through the Adirondacks in one form or another I finally had a true encounter with a moose. This was no ordinary moose either, but a mature bull with some serious antlers on his head.

It was around 10 a.m. on Monday, July 10. My friend Joe Dan Ladd took this photo on July 10 and estimates the bull moose weighed 600 pounds.

Reardon of Ballston Spa and I were paddling on the Cedar River Flow in the central Adirondacks. We were about two-thirds of the way down the flow and in the middle of the lake paddling directly into a south wind that had finally let up enough to allow us take a break.

Ironically we were talking about opportunistic wildlife encounters at the exact moment we spotted the moose. I pointed to the shoreline about a half-mile away where there was a dark object.

I said something to Joe speculating as to what it could be; a bear, a moose, a rock, or more likely, an uprooted tree? I then
