

Next local craft beer: Northway

By Cathy DeDe

Chronicle Managing Editor

There's a Lake George Brew House?

Yes, but: "We've had a bit of an identity crisis," admits its manager, Bob Craven.

For the record, last year they produced about 4,000 barrels of craft beers, and it operates a large drop-in tasting and sales room, all in a converted cineplex on Route 9 in Queensbury, next to The Fun Spot.

But it's been a name game for the business almost from day one. It opened in 2014 as David-

Football: Doomed?

By Mark Frost

Chronicle Editor

With the Super Bowl upon us, it's appropriate to ponder the state of professional football — and of college and competitive football in general.

Until the last year or so, the National Football League was invincible — the nation's dominant sport, the television networks' ratings juggernaut, the source of community pride and ever escalating wealth from locker rooms to owner suites.

Suddenly, though, Superman meets Kryptonite. Concussion exposés reveal men's brains turned to mush. Political strife was triggered by ex-quarterback Colin Kaepernick's national anthem sit-

For the 25th straight year L.P. Adams Lumberyard will compete in the Lake George Winter Carnival outhouse races. That's a long run, especially considering they come from Dalton, Massachusetts.

"When I was a teenager, my father and a group he worked with were looking for something to do in the winter-time," says Todd Adams, sev-
