Jake Zanoni, 23, and Spencer Bray, 22, have been “best buddies” since they met in sixth grade at Glens Falls Middle School.

They were soccer teammates whose fun ranged from biking to Lake George to building a potato cannon from PVC pipe that shot spuds a hundred yards into Crockwell Pond.

Now they aim to get rich together. Jake and Spencer are passionate investors in Bitcoin and other “cryptocurrencies.”

“We heard about Bitcoin two or three years ago” and started investing last year.

“We seriously believe in cryptocurrency,” says Spencer. “It’s the dawn of a new financial era. We have high expectations.”

“Overall, we probably spend two to three hours a day on cryptocurrency,” says Jake.

“We have a joint account,” they said. “We create a plan for this and attack it.”

They don’t reveal how much they have invested. But do they expect to become millionaires?

“We definitely do believe we will become millionaires,” replies Spencer.

Jake cautions, “Don’t put in

The many people wanting to photograph snowy and short-eared owls on the Fort Edward Grasslands continues to prompt sometimes heated discussion about trespassing, property rights, animal well-being and wildlife photography ethics.

Dr. Gordon Ellmers, whose wildlife photos have appeared many times in The Chronicle and elsewhere, said that when he started photographing birds several years ago, “there were three or four of us out there. Now there Might Warren County-funded senior meals preparation survive at the Cedars Senior Living Community? A reprieve seemed possible Tuesday as nine county supervisors came for lunch.

Claudia Braymer, Ward 3 supervisor from Glens Falls, said the resolution had been pulled from
