Eateries carry on carry out

By Cathy DeDe

Chronicle Managing Editor

Like numerous area restaurants, The Log Jam is operating but not without stress.

General manager Tony Grecco cried just for a second during the phone interview, talking of long-time staff he's had to lay off due to the coronavirus pandemic.

From the 80 to 90 staffers — “in the high season, over 100” — “right now there are three people besides me.”

Mr. Grecco said, “I'm here 32 years myself. A lot have been here for 20 years, the core have all been over 10 years. It's not just a job, this is their livelihood.”

He said they did 100 dinners, versus the typical 500 last Saturday. “I never thought I'd be happy doing 100 on a Saturday night.”

Amid NYS shutdown, hanging in, sadness at the layoffs

The Apostolic Christian Fellowship on Warren St.

They're not the only ones praying, assumes Chronicle editor Mark Frost. The region continued this week in a state of suspended animation about COVID-19. Most locals seem to be taking seriously the often deadly pandemic disease and obeying the Governor's stay-home edict. But you also see people and businesses launching initiatives, community positivism, and debate.

Coronavirus news vacuum

By Mark Frost

Chronicle Editor

The fact is that we have no idea where the Glens Falls region stands with the COVID-19. Are tons of us walking around with it? Or are we wonderfully remote or amazingly lucky so far?

“We are still awaiting a LOT of test results, some now as much as 8 days old. So a rough estimate would be that we are awaiting results on a few hundred tests,” Glens Falls Hospital vice-president Ray Agnew said in reply to a Chronicle inquiry late Tuesday

“Sadly, I was just informed that we have our first inpatient to return a positive test result.”

So does that mean Warren County has three cases, up from the two that's been listed for days on NYS Health's website? (It has Washington County at three.)

Warren County offers no guidance.

'Need Chronicle's good, honest news'

Hi Mark!

I wanted to email you after reading your Scoop in last week's Chronicle [“Will this be the last issue of The Chronicle for a while? Even forever?”] and to say that I am hoping that the future of The Chronicle remains bright. These are unprecedented times, but in times like this, we very much need good, honest, community-minded news, and I know that

Faults 'Scoop': Says, 'Treat Trump fairly'

To the Editor:

I was Totally disappointed in “The Inside Scoop” last week.

To say that Trump is “playing president on TV” was inappropriate. It's no secret he struggles to speak clearly and has an annoying habit of embellishing on, well, everything. “It was the greatest, it was the fastest”...you know what I mean. However, it seems to me, this president is being

Hospital: Limited use of N95 masks due to scarcity; 'Donate...'

Dear Mark,

As many have seen, there is a great deal of anxiety about the use of Personal Protective Equipment — especially N95 masks. I get it. Totally. Our nurses and physicians are the very front line in this war.

I am asked regularly why nurses and doctors are not given an N95 for every patient they examine. The answer is a

Pandemic's impact on mental health

Editor's note: Here's part of a post from Osika and Scarno Psychological Services, on Pine Street in Glens Falls:

With the onset of COVID-19, our office is incorporating COVID-19 into existing treatment plans AND preparing for the mental health fallout due to the restrictions on daily life.

At the beginning of each session we are asking patients how they are doing with Activities of Daily Living (ADL's). Whereas ADL's are a topic to address with only the severely mentally ill, they are now an
