Bridge over tranquil water

Washington County DPW celebrated the new Shushan Bridge over the Batten Kill

Quite the turnout, quite the festive mood as the towns of Salem & Jackson were re-connected via County Route 61 after seven months of having to go round-about routes. The $3.3-million bridge was paid 80% by the federal government, 15% by New York, 5% local share. Photo/Tim Hardy

Dog attack advice

Hi Mark,
Just read your account of Maggie's attack in the latest edition [Jan. 12].

Hope she's doing well, and tolerating the E collar ok. [E collar refers to "Elizabethan" collar, often referred to as a "cone."]

As a pretty much lifelong breeder — I whelped out my first litter of puppies when I was a sophomore in high school, and graduated from SMA in 1969, so do the math — I can assure you there is a much more effective way of protecting your dogs while on a walk than a can of repellent.

Go to Tractor Supply or any farm store and get yourself a cattle prod — and get one with a long wand so you never have to stick your hands into a dog fight or attack. Trust me, they work.

Had you had one with Maggie, my guess is that she never even would have had to go to the vet.

And the aggressor, while ini-

IDA does us wrong, say Wash. Co. chiefs

By Cathy DeDe
Chronicle Managing Editor

Members of the Washington County Board Supervisors, seemingly alarmed by the Warren-Washington County Industrial Development Agency's decision in December to extend PILOT and other tax incentives to a planned solar farm in Queensbury — despite objections from both the Town of Queensbury and the Queensbury School District — called the IDA to task during their Personnel and Finance Committee meeting last week.

Committee chair, Hebron Supervisor Brian Campbell, who also sits on the IDA as a repre-
